

UFCFP6-30-3 - IT PRACTICE: CONSULTANCY PROJECT
STUDENT PREFERENCES & QUALIFICATIONS TEMPLATE

This template will, when completed, inform tutors' client allocations process. Project teams should also keep it at hand and use it, much later when reviewing your project at the end. It will help you review and analyse your initial expectations about the project (which will inform the concept of a quality product), the project you conducted, its deliverables, outcomes and benefits, in your final report.

Instructions: listen to prospective clients at the briefing workshops, gather the necessary information to help you judge their respective merits, based on the criteria you developed beforehand, then record your preferences and dis-preferences using the format presented here. Your reasoning MUST be included too. We will do our best to satisfy your preferences but need a rational analysis of what you consider the prospective projects are and why your team is suited to which. Your reasoning is as important as your preferences. Assume first of all that you will not get one of your five preferred clients. Do NOT simply make a pitch for one or two specific organisations.

Reasoning (crucial – see instructions above): we would like the following information on the experience or interests of team members, and the rationale behind our preferences, reserves and aversions, taken into account in the client matching and allocations process:-

- 1. South Bank Club – Most of our team is from Software Engineering and we have experience in providing the requirement of the client and we believe we can deliver the solution whatever the client needs
- 2. ArtSpace Lifespace - We have
- 3. AccessSport -
- 4. Voice4Her
- 5. South Western Ambulance Service NHS
